

Principal Investigator – New Jersey

Richard Grubb and Associates is seeking a Principal Investigator to be based out of its Cranbury – New Jersey office. This is an opportunity for an enterprising archaeologist to join a growing full-service cultural resource management firm. Prior work experience in the mid-Atlantic preferred but not required

Principal Investigator responsibilities include:

- Coordination with review agencies including various SHPO, federal and state agencies.

- Direct, plan, organize, and manage archaeological surveys, site recordation, monitoring, and other fieldwork duties in New Jersey and surrounding states.

- Supervise a crew chief with multiple crews on large projects when necessary.

- Prepare archaeological survey reports, including technical writing.

- Communicate with clients on survey results and ensure that projects are performed within budget and in accordance with project schedules.

- Management of all aspects of cultural resource projects and must have advanced experience in proposal writing, technical report reviews and senior staff management.

- Direct contact with federal, state, county, municipal, and private clients, and interface with regulatory agencies.

Qualified applicants must possess:

- MA/MS or Ph.D. degree in Archaeology, Anthropology or related field.

- Experience with the archaeology, prehistory, history and ethnohistory of mid-Atlantic region (preferred)

- A good working knowledge of NEPA and Section 106.

- Ability to manage archaeology staff.

- Advanced ability to prepare technical and cost proposals.

- Technical writing, communication, and problem-solving skills.

- Collegiality in working with architectural historians and historians as part of a team environment.

- Registered Professional Archaeologist (RPA) designation preferred.

This is a full-time position and compensation includes a complete benefits package. Salary is dependent upon qualifications. Ability to perform geophysical surveys would be a plus.
